Love "On a Margin."
You ask me for a "put" on love,
To "call" my heart your own;
Why, sir, this market's "strong,"
I've made this "deal" alone.
You say you want to buy me "long?"
Yet on the board you're "short;"
I fear you're in a "pinch," my boy,
And will get badly "caught."
Of "bidders" each I know of lots,
But you they're not will "take;"
Your "margin" never lavishes,
Besides, you're on the make.
And when the "roll" "tumble" comes,
We'll part—like "mice and corn;"
I know you'd "skip the pool,"
And leave me a hapless "mourner."
So "put away your umbrella,"
And take your "coupons" back;
To love's "option" I'm no seller,
Good morning, sir, "You're off the track."
—Grace Courtland.

Ulysses Grant Jr.
Ulysses Grant Jr., or "Buck" Grant as he is generally called, is now twenty-eight years old and one of the most successful financiers of his age in this country. His talent in that direction has been fully brought out during the last two years. During the closing days of his father's presidency he acted as his private secretary. Grant doubted every one but him when Babcock fell, and would not allow any one but Buck to have access to his private papers. Buck was at this time modest, smooth faced, medium sized, slim in figure, and very boyish looking. His modesty and real ability, however, made him many friends. Some powerful men in New York took up Buck when his father set out for Europe. Young Ulysses, who is a graduate of Harvard, thought that his future was to be developed in the legal profession. He was, after admission to the bar, assigned to duty in the district attorney's office in New York. There Secretary John Sherman had thrown special business in his way. Buck Grant after accumulating a small capital under influential and powerful auspices, began making ventures in Wall street. He succeeded so well that he abandoned the law for the more profitable field of speculation. Becoming interested, finally, in mining stocks, he paid a visit to the Pacific coast, where the great bonanza firm of Flood & O'Brien took him under its wing. Mr. Flood tossed young Buck a few points, and he made such good use of them that the great speculators backed the young Ulysses in his cruise around the world of speculation, acting as his mentors at every point. The docile pupil so made use of his training that at the end of two years he had $300,000 placed to his credit. It was only when this sum was reached that the young man proposed a matrimonial alliance with the great firm. Buck has now associated with him as a partner, his brother, Jesse D. Grant. Buck himself promises to become one of the most brilliant operators in the country. Besides the fortune he has made for himself, he has made several special speculations for his father. Just before Gen. Grant went to Mexico he entrusted to Buck Grant $25,000 for the purpose of seeing what could be done with it. Buck Grant, during the absence of his father, cleared for him from the capital some $40,000; so Gen. Grant, upon his return, found a dispatch placing $65,000 at his disposal by his thirty son. With this profitable speculation added to his credit Gen. Grant is worth today in the neighborhood of $150,000.—Milwaukee News.

General Haskell, of the Salvation Army, entertained a large crowd on a St. Louis Street corner the other day. He told them that he was formerly a circus man and a good card player. He said that over in East St. Louis the Army had a camp where they fed the hungry. He said he did not care who came—if he was right out of the penitentiary and was hungry he should have something to eat. It was no use talking religion to a hungry man. First fill his stomach. You could never convert a hungry man. There had never been an instance of it on earth. Of the different political parties, he said there were good men in each party, good men in the Democratic party as well as in the Republican. More than that there were good men who were editors, and up in Casey county, Iowa, George W. Ashton, editor of the Clarion, had been converted to God, the first instance in the history of Christianity.
